"The half-and-half plan," said Col. Truesdell, "has controlled to a very large degree the appropriations for the District. Over and over again attempts have been made in the House to appropriate for various projects in the District and make the District pay all, but the insistence upon the half-and-

Senator Works asked Col. Truesdell if he did not believe that Congress should appropriate for all the needs of the capital, the residents of the capital paying a reasonable tax into the Treasury. Col. Truesdell said that theoretically he believed in such a plan. "Practically, I do not," he added. "You are afraid of overtaxation if the half-and-half plan is done away?" asked Senator Works.
"Yes, I am," was the frank reply. Col. Truesdell explained that if the needs of the District were large, that If the government ceased paying a

"The experience in California," said Senator Works, "shows that you are wrong when you say that the place for woman is limited to the home."

H. L. Rust, a real estate dealer, one of the men included in the list of witnesses called for by Senator Works, was the next witness. He testified in reply to questions by Senator Works that he believed the half-and-half plan was "beneficial in every way" and should be retained: that it was as nearly equitable a plan as could be found and was definite.

"Are you satisfied with taxes in Washington" asked Senator Works. "The assessment is somewhat high," was the reply. "The rate as fixed by law is all right."

Fear to Abolish Plan.

Mr. Rust testified that he thought the people of the District generally feared that if the half-and-half plan was abolished the government would not put up its share of the annual expenditures of the capital.

"But you are rolling up a surplus, it has been said here, under the half-and-half plan," commented Representative Gard.

"A surplus might be made to accumulate," replied Mr. Rust, "but there are abundant projects for which all this money raised here by taxation can be used."

"What needs of the District are there not now being cared for?" asked Representative Gard.

"What needs of the District are there not now being cared for?" asked Representative Gard.

Mr. Rust said that there were many. He mentioned the need of more parks, particularly a park connecting Rock in the northeastern section, a park in the Dean place at Connecticut avenue and Florida avenue northwest, and many small parks in the new subdivisions of the city. He also declared a number of new bridges were badly seeded by the District, including one to take the place of the present Calvert Street bridge across Rock creek.

Representative Cooper questioned Mr. Rust about the law ought to be changed, for at the law ought to be changed, for at present it puts too heavy a burden on many owners of outlying property, some of them small holders.

"Would you favor suffrage for the District." asked Representative Gard. "No," said Mr. Rust, "I would not." He concluded his testimony with the statement that there is a general feeling abroad that if the half-and-half plan is done away with," said Mr. Worthing-ton.

"Oh, no," said Commissioner Brownlow. "Neither Commissioner Newman nor myself made such a statement."

"Then it was Col. Lancaster," said Mr. Worthing-ton. "Col. Lancaster is not one of the Commissioners." Said Commissioners Brownlow.

Representative Rainey called attention to the fact that the revenues of the District would produce a surplus this year unless Congress should appropriate some $17,000,000 for the next fiscal year.

"We could use it all," said Col. Truesdell he looked after if that sum was approperty, some of them small holders.

"Would you favor suffrage for the District added to a like amount of money contributed by the government might be more than the District would need, but that time had not yet come.

"What useful function does the District of Columbia, as a separate organization, perform?" asked Senator Works.

Suggests Five Commissioners.

Mr. Clayton advocated a change in the number of the members of the board of District Commissioners to five, two to be elected by the people, two to be appointed by the President and the Engineer Commissioner, an army officer. He said that he believed that all males of voting age, white or said, were the war, overbuilding and the agitation in Congress the last few years against the half-and-half plan.

Questioned by Mr. Worthington, Col. Truesdell told the committee that the Board of Trade, called a body of "plutocrats" by an earlier witness, was a very representative hody of citizens Edythe Howard, Miss Ethel MacMur-Devereaux and Robert H. Chapman.

Among those expected to participate are Mrs. W. Sinclair Bowen, Miss Edythe Howard, Miss Ethel MacMurray, Walter Tuckerman, Dr. Cary Grayson, George Oakley Totten, William Corcoran, Col. W. W. Harts, Melvin C. Hazen, Samuel Ross, Thomas P. Worgan, Ir., and Thomas Bones. "plutocrats" by an earlier witness, was a very representative body of citizens of the District, some 1,300 in simber, including very many men of moderate means. He said that the Board of Trade, instead of being a selfish organization, as charged by some witnesses, had been instrumental in having Congress pass almost all the legislation for improvements in the District.
